Program: UMD-Winter Morocco (ARHU/ENGL)
Term: Winterterm 2018
Major: Communication

Studying abroad gave me the opportunity to see how independent I actually am. I went to Morocco and I didn't know any Arabic or French, or what to expect in general. The language barrier made me want to pick up on both languages so that I could connect and engage with my host family. My host family was amazing and showed me that complete strangers can become family. By the end of the trip, I picked up on very basic Arabic and some French, and I learned how to navigate the city of Rabat. We visited various other cities and met so many caring people who were enthusiastic about their country, and wanted to connect with us so that anytime we come back to Morocco, we have people and places to go to.

Advice for future #TerpsAbroad: I would tell other black women who want to study abroad to go for it. Studying abroad will not only provide you with a more open mind, and a greater worldview, but it can also help you to obtain
